Excerpt: .The food of lackeys; then those women things, Who, wanting husband, or the coin he brings, Contrive the work of bringing forth a scrawl. And next a deeper ill, beliefs that fall; And restless prayer s disheartened, erring call; For him who clasps the hands and lifts the eyes, A cross in dust, a desert in the skies; And then, a shameful ill, the rattling coin The brute enjoyment thinks the tone to join; And drink and food, besotted selfishness, Which rocks and snores in its own brutishness. A modern tyrant comes, a novel plague, Mediocrity, that finds itself the best, To heat the vat in which the iron seethes, Would cast therein bronze Caesar and his wreaths;-The temper of the cliques, the butcher s smell, Which, like a sickness, on the country fell, Quite apt the motherland to put to shame If native...
