Excerpt: . . . j for there is no object upon which more varied or more extended knowledge may be advantageously bestowed. A citizen of London may be naturally proud of the commercial fleets which daily arrive and depart, the latter exporting the produce of national industry, the former importing foreign productions or treasures, fulfilling the prediction of Pope in his early poem, Windsor Forest. He says--The time shall come when, free as waves and wind, Unbounded Thames shall flow for all mankind, Whole nations enter on each swelling tide, And seas but join the regions they divide. Earths distant ends our glory shall behold, And the new world launch forth to seek the old. He cannot, indeed, contemplate this immense scene of action without confessing that his native city owes its wealth and greatness to commerce and the sovereignty of the seas. The following table shows the...
